Selwyn House Senior Players

Present

*Inherit
the Wind*

by Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee

Directed by: Dr. Byron Harker

ABOUT THE PLAY ¹

"Early in 1925 the Tennessee legislature, dominated by Fundamentalists, passed a bill providing that 'it shall be unlawful for any teacher in any of the universities, normals and all other public schools of the State, which are supported in whole or in part by the public school funds of the State, to teach any theory that denies the story of the Divine creation of man as taught in the Bible.'

This law had no sooner been placed upon the books than a little group of men in the sleepy town of Dayton, Tennessee, decided to put it to the test. George Rappelyea, a mining engineer, was drinking lemon phosphates in Robinson's drug store with John Thomas Scopes, a likable young man of twenty-four who taught biology at the Central High School, and two or three others. Rappelyea proposed that Scopes should allow himself to be caught red-handed in the act of teaching the theory of evolution to an innocent child, and Scopes—half serious, half in joke—agreed. Their motives were apparently mixed; it was characteristic of the times that Rappelyea declared that their action would put Dayton on the map. At all events, the illegal deed was shortly perpetrated and Scopes was arrested. William Jennings Bryan forthwith volunteered his services to the prosecution; Rappelyea wired the Civil Liberties Union in New York and secured for Scopes the legal assistance of Clarence Darrow, Dudley Field Malone, and Arthur Garfield Hays; the trial was set for July 1925, and Dayton suddenly discovered that it was to be put on the map with a vengeance.

In the eyes of the public, the trial was a battle between Fundamentalism on the one hand and twentieth-century skepticism on the other. The champions of both causes were headliners. Bryan had been three times a candidate for the Presidency, had been Secretary of State, and was a famous orator; he was the perfect embodiment of old-fashioned American idealism—friendly, naive, provincial. Darrow, a radical, a friend of the under dog, an agnostic, had recently jumped into the limelight of publicity through his defense of Leopold and Loeb [two notorious murderers of a child].

It was a strange trial. Into the quiet town of Dayton flocked gaunt Tennessee farmers and their families in mule-drawn wagons and ramshackle Fords; quiet, godly people in overall and gingham and black, ready to defend their faith against the "foreigners," yet curious to know what this new-fangled evolutionary theory might be. Revivalists of every sort flocked there, too, held their meetings on the outskirts of the town under the light of flares, and tacked up signs on the trees about the courthouse—'Read Your Bible Daily for One Week,' and 'Be Sure Your Sins Will Find You Out.'

Yet the atmosphere of Dayton was not simply that of rural piety. Hot-dog vendors and lemonade vendors set up their stalls along the streets as if it were circus day. Booksellers hawked volumes on biology. Over a hundred newspaper men poured into the town. The Western Union installed twenty-two telegraph operators in a room off a grocery store. And meanwhile two million words were being telegraphed out of Dayton, the trial was being broadcast by Chicago Tribune's station WGN, the Dreamland Circus at Coney Island offered "Zip" to the Scopes defense as a "missing link," cable companies were reporting enormous increases in transatlantic cable calls, and news agencies in London were being besieged with requests for more copy from Switzerland, Italy, Germany, Russia, China, and Japan. Ballyhoo had come to Dayton.

The climax came on the afternoon of July 20, when on the spur of the moment Hays asked that the defense be permitted to put Bryan on the stand as an expert on the Bible, and Bryan consented. So great was the crowd that afternoon that the judge decided to move the court outdoors, to a platform built against the courthouse under the maple trees. Benches were set out before it. The reporters sat on the benches, on the ground, anywhere, and scribbled their stories. On the outskirts of the seated crowd a throng stood in the hot sunlight which streamed down through trees."

Clearly, the central situation and many of the details in Inherit the Wind (1955) parallel those in the famous Scopes Monkey Trial. The playwrights, Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee, change the name of the town to Hillboro, the names of the famous lawyers to Brady and Drummond, and the name of the defendant to Cates. They add the sub-plot (reminiscent of that of Romeo and Juliet) between Rachel Brown, her father, and Cates to develop the theme alluded to in the title. For the central scene in the play, however, the examination of Brady by Drummond, the playwrights draw most of the details from their historical model.

We have taken the liberty of representing that the entire trial took place outside on the courthouse lawn, the Argyle Street windows representing the outside of the courthouse and the right-hand lighting tower its clock tower.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Love and gratitude to Virginia Ferguson, who has done everything in her power to help the director to get this blimp off the ground. Besides performing at her own initiative innumerable hands-on tasks, Virginia has drummed up support and help from the wider School community and buoyed up the director's occasionally sagging spirits. Virginia will not be able to help us next year because she will be teaching a night course in children's literature at the School of Library Science at McGill. Good luck, Virginia, in this new departure, and thanks for your continuing and amazingly generous help and love.

Special thanks, hugs and kisses also to the director's other distaff supporters and tireless helpers: Kathi Biggs, Mary Ellen Viau, and Brenda Montgomery.

Gratitude to Mark Morgenstern for giving up his life and skills to us during the final boarding stages and first flights. We much appreciate his friendship and his expertise in filming and teaching others to film on video.

Thanks and warm greetings from SHS to Brian Fanning, a personal friend to the Krushelnyski's, for his impressive artwork and his expert advice.

SPECIAL GREETINGS and thanks to all my Old Boys who agreed at Virginia's invitation to appear as extras!!!

Thanks to Debbie Dragone and Jim Leonidis for helping us with MONEY and for supporting us with their enthusiastic interest.

Thanks to Sara Colby for helping us with art work—at the last minute, as usual.

Thanks to Allison Gibbs, Erin Riggs, and Hilary McGown for their exemplary constancy in attending rehearsals and set-building sessions.

Thanks to the Phys. Ed. guys, especially Pete Govan and Steve Mitchell, for giving up to us their space and their guys.

Thanks and long-term service awards to Monty Krindle and to Roger Nincherl.

Thanks to Simplicio Urgel and Jim Cousins for their continuing interest and support.

Thanks and love to Marc Krushelnyski for yet again giving up his March break (and the two weeks after it) to attend to yet another Senior Play.

Thanks to Christine Krushelnyski for many favours, including making arrangements for the hot dog stand and the cotton candy machine.
